

Announcing the Release of A Dream in the Clouds, a Politically-Neutral Anthology Inspired by the 2008 United States Presidential Election.

A Dream in the Clouds - A politically-neutral collection of poetry, prose, and art inspired by the 2008 U.S. Presidential Election – with contributions from a Grammy award nominee, a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship winner, writers from four (4) continents, Pushcart award nominees and winners, university professors, professional artists, and some amateurs too.

Chicago, IL - March 27, 2010 – Bobo Strategy, a publisher based in Chicago, announces the release of A Dream in the Clouds, a politically-neutral collection of poetry, prose, and art inspired by the 2008 United States Presidential election. It includes a range of perspectives on the themes of the election, from every point along the political spectrum. Contributors include a Grammy award nominee, a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship winner, writers from four (4) continents, Pushcart award nominees and winners, university professors, professional artists, and some amateurs too.

The spirited debate of this book is particularly timely in the context of the nation's policy debates over health care, the economy, and other political issues of importance to both Americans and the international community.

Was the election "a dream come true"? Or do the winners "have their heads in the clouds?" Authors and artists share their perspectives in A Dream in the Clouds.
